

March Forth: The Grammar Song

Official theme song of National Grammar Day
Lyrics by Mignon Fogarty, Music by Erika Paul

Hey, all you grammar lovers
Come on and march forth with me.

March forth
Grammar is the bomb
March forth
The band is playing our song
March forth
Grammar can't go wrong
March forth
You know it won't take long

Drive slowly in a fast car, and
Let the adverbs fly
Get brave enough to boldly go, and
Split right through the sky

Decorate with prepositions
Over, on, and by
Plant a noun between two trees
Let the adverbs fly

March forth
Loudly, quickly, well
March forth
It doesn't hurt to spell
March forth
Jointly, smartly, fast
March forth
Good grammar is meant to last

The present is continuous because we are singing
The past was continuous because you were ringing
The future is continuous when you will be bringing
A love of good grammar, to the whole world singing.

March forth
Grammar is the bomb
March forth
The band is playing our song
March forth
Grammar can't go wrong
March forth
You know it won't take long

The present is perfect because we have walked
The past was perfect because we had talked
If the future is perfect, we will have soared

If you love good grammar, you'll never be bored.

March forth

[spoken] @Word_czar's thinking is that possessives precede gerunds.

March forth

[spoken] @Murkland has stockpiled everyone's surplus apostrophes to toss as confetti.

March forth

[spoken] @hallowdmachine wants us to gather 'round the table while Dad splits the infinitive.

March forth

[spoken] @MarthAYoung has a dangling participle she's been dying to wear.

March forth

[spoken] @EditorMark is feeling anxious about National Grammar Day--eager, but anxious.

March forth

[spoken] Happy National Grammar Day, everyone. Exelauno

Note: @ designates a Twitter username.

Copyright 2010 Mignon Fogarty, Inc. and Erika Paul